A FILTHY WEED.

Charges Made Against the U. C.

By Some of Berkeley's Citizens.

They Don't Want Tobacco Grown.

As It Teaches Students to Smoke—The W. C. T. U. are Going to Fight It to a Finish.

Teach Students to Smoke.

Charges are being made against the University of California by some of Berkeley's citizens. They say that it is teaching the young to smoke.

Ever since its foundation there have been those who argued that the University ruined its students spiritually, but never before has there been any complaint about their physical welfare.

Some of the more interested ones now go so far as to say that the University is actually teaching its students to smoke. The trouble has all come about by the extensive tobacco plantation which the institution supports near the upper Oxford-street entrance to the grounds, where there are some sixty or seventy rows of healthy looking tobacco plants, comprising twenty or thirty varieties of the weed.

Its location is very prominent, being right adjacent to one of the principal entrances. The tobacco is not distributed among the students, but the great cry being raised is that it sets a bad example for them.

Some of the pastors of the various Berkeley churches, who receive so many letters from parents in various parts of the State who have sons attending the University, asking that they be kept in the straight and narrow way, have been looking into the matter. Dr. H. A. Ketchum of the First Presbyterian Church does not approve of the idea at all. "Not a member of the faculty, not a Regent, not a man of them approves of smoking," he says. "It is a curse to manhood. It looks as though the University could find some better business. The influence of that tobacco plantation upon the students is undoubtedly very strong, and it should be removed."

Dr. Bentley of the Methodist Church thinks that the land could be put to much better use as a cornfield or potato patch. "I decidedly object to the University raising tobacco. I suppose that they will next try to perfect the culture of opium," said he.

Captain Keelner, the chief gardener of the agricultural department, is very much chagrined about the way the people are complaining of the University growing tobacco. "What else are the people going to complain about?"

"They have got nothing else to do but kick about me and my tobacco. Why don't they stop a lot of the other evils that are going on about the University?"

It is the general sense among the members of the Women's Christian Temperance Union that they take the subject up and fight it to the end. They are desirous of crushing the tobacco in the bud, knowing the longer it runs the more difficult it would be to stop. Mrs. Armstrong, a prominent member of that organization, in speaking of it the other day said: "Of course the faculty should discourage the use of tobacco, but how in the world are they going to do it and raise the stuff on the grounds at the same time? Any one who has studied the evil effects of nicotine would surely be against the University procuring tobacco."—S. F. Examiner.

Business Improving.

The croakers may say what they please and keep up their grumbling until food falls into their mouths from above, but it is a fact and growing more visible every day that business has begun to revive. News comes from all parts of the State of the movement in one direction or another.

While in each individual town it is not marked very emphatically, yet there is a movement of some kind, that gives labor a show for its life, which has got a start and will keep on getting a better place as time passes.

In Berkeley there is a good building movement going on that has given employment to all of the idle carpenters who care to work a chance to make a good living. Various matters are underway that our people may have employment. This means a movement of money and that means business. It is the same in other places. In Vallejo times have not been so good for many years and the town is beginning to grow and thrive again. At Stockton there appears to be a boom on account of the commencement of the building of two railroads with headquarters at that place.

The farmers are very busy gathering their crops and so are the fruit raisers and soon the wine and hop men will have work for a great many people. It is all of these things in the aggregate that makes the hum of industry sound through the air and it sings a song that cheers the heart of the poor man and warms his fireside and the wife and family of little ones who for a long time have been able to exist only on the dregs of poverty.

Cheer up, good people, and believe that the people's watchman, the daily newspaper, is bringing you words of good cheer. Open your eyes and put forth your hands in daily labor that you may enjoy the sweets of it as the bee extracts the honey from the thistle. Thistle dew, as it were.

Mercantile Advice.

The lager beer made by the American brewery has proved a great success. You can get a dozen pint bottles of it delivered at your residence for fifty cents.

A regular French restaurant is kept by Mrs. E. Beraun & Co., corner 5th street and University Avenue. Everything first-class.

The name of Rutledge's store is almost as old as the name of the town. The doctor is always at the store on University Avenue and Fifth streets to prepare prescriptions or sell anything in his line and that means a thousand and one things these days.

J. Spenger, who is located on 4th street between University Avenue and Bristol street sells all kinds of grain, meal and feed at mill prices. His provisions and groceries can be had at bed rock prices for cash.

Any person that wants a meal satisfactory in every respect can get one at the Fair View hotel, and they give you five tickets for $1.

Miss Teague, West Berkeley's eff-cient postmistress, keeps a store in addition to doing Uncle Sam's work. In the store you will find a nice selection of stationery, notions, dry and fancy goods to choose from. She also has in stock all kinds of School books.

In the northern portion of the town Daniel Dugan has the call for supplying fresh and choice groceries. His bar is well stocked with imported and domestic goods, also first-class cigars.

Horses are cheap nowadays and nearly everybody keeps one. To own a horse means that you must have a harness and a saddle, with whip, brush and blanket. P. Nichelman in Brun's block, corner University and San Pablo avenues, makes a specialty of this business and can sell you a good article cheaper than anybody.

Mrs. E. Devaga has recently fitted up the store on University Avenue near Fifth street and filled it with a well selected stock of goods to suit the wants of the town. Ladies will find here the famous Butterick patterns, and can look them over while partaking of ice cream soda which is always on hand. A branch of the Dwight Way Bakery is also here, as well as the agency of the Berkeley laundry.

Out Again.

C. T. Kerns, deputy marshal met with an accident last Wednesday. As he was going up the stairs of his residence, two steps at once, on nearing the top he felt something give way in his back. He soon found himself unable to move. Three or four days of rest and medical treatment cured him up sufficiently to get out of doors and today he is feeling all right again.

The Socialist party of the Pacific Coast has now an established organ of its own. It was issued under the name of "The Socialist" at San Francisco on the 13th inst. and contains the tenets of the Society. The text upon which the Society will be guided by is "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." The doctrine may be found easier to preach than practice. However if the members of the association live up to this, as near as possible, they cannot go astray, and cannot help doing an immense amount of good. In all good work they should be successful.

Eighty-seven new subscribers to the GAZETTE last week was doing pretty well. We expect to do better this week. Subscribers not getting their papers will confer a great favor upon the proprietors by giving us notice.

It looks so far as newspapers go that some one was endeavoring to injure the Dingee waterworks at Alvarado by making the attempt to pump the wells dry. In most instances of this kind the effect is to produce a greater flow and the Dingee Company may be benefitted instead of hurt.

Complaint has been made that a nuisance exists at North Berkeley in and about the old building that was formerly used as a railroad station. Also a small untenanted building near by is in a very foul state. The Health Officer will attend to it.

There was a fire in Temescal on Saturday evening which burned a two-story house to the ground. Some of the furniture was saved owing to the strenuous efforts of some of the motor-men and conductors attached to the electric roads.

Another contest for supremacy took place today between the Yachts Defender and Vigilant. The former has prestige although the margin is not a very wide one. Much interest is evidenced in the outcome.

A young crippled son of Mr. Davis the expressman of West Berkeley broke his leg last evening while jumping off the cars.

HULA-HULA.

Passengers on the Oakland Ferry Boats

No Longer Have the Maccaroni Band.

Their Places Filled by Muscle Dancers.

Knights of Honor Installation—Poisoned in the Water—Other Local News.

Hula-Hula.

If any credence can be placed in the Chronicle the passengers on the Oakland ferry steamers during Saturday evening were treated to something out of the usual line. It appears, according to the story related, that four persons, two male and two female, passed on the boat which left San Francisco at 8 o'clock that evening for Oakland. One of them carried a guitar and all were clad in wraps for outside garments. They passed into the main saloon and as the boat got away from the wharf the man with the guitar commenced to play music adapted to the Hawaiian dance. Quickly the other man and the two women threw off their outward wraps and appeared in stage costume, going through the dance as many have seen it done in a theater.

On its completion a hat was passed around and quite a sum of money was collected. This kind of a performance was given on succeeding trips of the boat much to the disgust of the staid passengers but greatly to the delight of the commoners. For a wonder none of the officers of the boats interfered to prevent the dance although it is hardly possible that a thing of this kind could have occurred without their knowledge.

Knights of Honor Installation.

Last Saturday evening the officers for the present term of Tahoe Lodge, No. 1876, Knights of Honor, were installed by Grand Dictator P. L. Archibald, assisted by Vice Dictator W. M. Morrison of Ivanhoe Lodge, West Oakland, and C. Learned, grand assistant dictator of San Francisco.

Following is the list of the officers: Past Dictator, W. McVey; Dictator, S. Wright; Vice Dictator, C. G. Wright; Assistant Dictator, J. J. Hidalgo; Reporter, S. A. Penwell; Financial Reporter, W. R. Dickieson; Treasurer, C. R. Brown; Chaplain, Thomas Jones; Guide, J. J. Peterson; Guardian, ———; Sentinel, Paul O'Connell; Trustees, S. H. Borkheim, J. J. Peterson and Paul O'Connell.

After installation and the work of the evening was finished the Lodge was closed and all repaired to the adjoining hall where refreshments had been provided and a pleasant time was passed in listening to speeches from the grand officers and visiting brethren until the time for the last train to go when all departed with the best wishes for future prosperity of Tahoe Lodge.

Poisoned in the Water.

Jimmy Scott, the ten year old son of Floyd R. Scott, residing at 1166 Twentieth street, East Oakland, is quite ill at his home from blood poisoning, contracted in a peculiar manner. A week ago he was one of a party of young folks who went across the estuary to the Alameda shore to spend a few hours wading in the water.

The day was hot, and the boys remained in the water longer than they would have otherwise done. The next morning, the Scott boys's limbs were swollen double their natural size, and were steadily swelling, until his parents becoming alarmed sent for a physician, who pronounced the case a very dangerous one of blood poisoning.

The only cause that can be assigned for the disease, as the boy was in perfect health before bathing, is that the spot in the water where he remained so long was in the direct current of an emptying sewer, which impregnated the water with poison.

Cheap Power.

EDITOR GAZETTE:—In these days of progress there is much study concerning the cheap production of power as well as conveying that a long distance when obtained. Many experiments have been made to obtain this end through the action of water. The cheapest power produced today to any great extent is by this element. A natural fall and accumulation is the basis of the power obtained by the water wheel. Efforts have been made and to a certain extent were successful in making use of the tides as they rose and fell. By the use of floats attached to weights as well as by depression of wooden boxes, power has been obtained available for use in the immediate vicinity.

The conveyance of power to any great distance until electricity has furnished a new method could be done only to a very small extent on account of the great amount of friction which increased as to distance. This same friction exists today in conveying electric power. For a long time the loss was so great in conveying electrical power that it did not pay. New discoveries, new inventions and improvements upon old methods are fast changing the conveyance from one that would not pay to one in which there will be large profits.

While all these experiments have been going with water alone as the prime elements but little if anything at all has been done with making air to serve the same purpose as water.

Some thirty-eight years ago a man in Oregon patented a device to be used in connection with a windmill for the purpose of storing power for future use. This, of course, had been done before, but not to any extent that made it of practical use. His invention was simply a mechanical one and it was upon the construction that a patent was granted to him. It was simple. He used the windmill in the ordinary way for pumping water for his cattle on his ranch, but so constructed the machinery that when there was more power exerted than was necessary to perform the pumping work a weight was lifted. If the power in the wind was not sufficient to do the work the weight was then added automatically and the work went on until the weight run down or the wind died out. All extra power gained was saved and used.

Now, Mr. Editor, the proposition I wish to put forward is from the fact that during eight months of the year, Berkeley has the advantage of the trade winds which blow quite steadily and there is plenty of vacant room on the side hills, if not all over town, where windmills can be erected and the power derived from them can be locked up in storage batteries to be used at any time and in any place.

The recent improvements made by making lead so very porous, will no doubt bring the storage battery into more favorable notice so that, what at one time was almost impracticable, will soon be done with a profit. Then these storage batteries will become a great industry, and the air will primarily be harnessed to do the bidding of man.

BERKELEY FOR RESIDENCES.

In speaking of this University town as "Beautiful Berkeley" it must be taken with more meanings than one. The adjective may better apply to the name in the sense of a place of residence but then the same can be applied as a beautiful place for manufacturing purposes. It is the intent of this article to make it of use in the stricter sense or the one first mentioned.

The natural lay of the land in and about Berkeley is about as advantageous as nature could have well distributed it. Backed by hills sufficiently broken to prevent any monotony, they are divided by canyons filled with a good growth of trees, running vines and shrubs. The ground has a smooth covering of moss which to the tread is more delicate than any velvet carpet. Water of the purest quality pursues its way through the beds of the creeks within these canyons, trickling here and there in miniature waterfalls as small boulders arise to obstruct its passage. The motion of the water alone creates a cooling breeze on the hottest day which makes it luxurious to be within its enervating influence.

These canyons which, as said before break the smooth surface as it would be, are somewhat irregular but occur at intervals from the north end to the extreme south end of the town limits. The woody growth varies in density and quantity but in no place too dense to admit of the entrance of lots of people for picnicking purposes. Of a summer's day the delightful shade, the pure mountain water, the easy resting place of the moss-covered ground and the fragrant air scented with the odors of the bay, laurel and a dozen other arbors all tend to make ones senses of the kindest nature.

From these retreats, which are up an altitude varying from 500 to 1500 feet the view is one but seldom excelled.

Directly in front, and nestling at the foot of the hills, is the town of itself. Near to are the grounds of the University of California with its various buildings dotting the enclosure, and standing out as the enclosures of high education to incubate and take its flight to the far ends of the earth. There is more or less majesty in these buildings in the shape of trees which protect them from the wintry storms. Space is too limited to dwell too long upon this handsome spot and our eyes are cast upon the many handsome places of residence which perhaps number the most in East Berkeley but are seen in all the various portions of Berkeley. These fine residences are all garnished with gardens of good design and well landscaped. At the present height of our observation the whole town has the appearance of a highly colored and variegated carpet and the sense of sight is filled to its utmost with pleasure.

When the stare of the eyes makes them turn for relief the first thing which has the proper effect is the water view. The large bay of San Francisco broadens out in good expanse. Its bosom is dotted here and there with ships, steamers and vessels of all sizes, flying the flags of all nations in the world. As the ferry steamers move back and forth from the shores of the bay a good look is taken of them and then the vision passes out through the Golden Gate on the passive Pacific Ocean in all its grandeur. At almost any time vessels from long distances can be seen entering the harbor, and others at the same time are passing out.

This article having already exceeded the space allotted will be continued in another edition. With such a subject to write upon, one gets worked up with enthusiasm and can hardly be restrained. Come and see Berkeley and you will be agreeably surprised after reading the short attempt to tell of a few of the beauties of the town.

SHE is fourteen days old and her name is Marion Cleveland.

GOLD has commenced to go out of the country again, all stories to the contrary notwithstanding.

THE plan submitted for a music park at San Francisco is a handsome one and if carried out will be an everlasting monument for its projectors.

THE Western Packing Company of Portland, Oregon, has commenced to put up horse meat in cans for shipment East.

THE employees of the several pension agencies of the United States have been placed under the civil service regulations; also the firemen employed in all of the executive departments of the Government at Washington D. C.

A NEW labor body called the Federated Metal Trades of America has just come to the surface at St. Louis. The intent of this organization, which is a National one, is to make a fight for an eight-hour day.

RECENT advices from Davisville state that on account of frost and hot winds the fruit crop will only turn out about one-third of what was expected. Much grain has been destroyed by the breaking of the levees in that section of the country. One man, Mr. Swingle, losing his entire crop. He usually farms from 1000 to 1500 acres of grain.

The Durrant Trial.

The trial of Theodore Durrant commenced today in Judge Murphy's Court at San Francisco. As usual in such trials there was a large amount of morbid curiosity exhibited. It is surprising that females should exhibit this to such an extent but the facts go to show that they do. Preparations were made by the Chief of the Police to handle the expected crowd and so far no news of any difficulty has come to hand. It will probably be some days before a jury is secured.

Died.

In North Berkeley, July 20, Isabelle Andrews, a daughter of Mrs. Ada C Hartman and niece of John T. Mattie E. and Esther A. Cochell, a native of Washington, aged 16 years, 3 months and 20 days. The funeral took place this afternoon from her late residence, 1608 Louisa street. The interment was at Mountain View Cemetery.

Young Lady (out yachting)—What is the matter, Captain Quarterdeck? Captain—The fact is, my dear young lady, we've broken our rudder. Young Lady—I wouldn't worry about that. The rudder is mostly under water, you know, and it isn't likely people will notice it.—Tid-Bits.

Phoebe T. Watkins et al have sold to Andrew C. Lawson a portion of lot 7, block H, Berkeley property.

THE AD. SIGN PAINTER.

ONE OF THEM RELATES CHAPTERS FROM HIS EXPERIENCE.

How He Managed to Advertise on the Walls of Fort Sumter—When the Boes Objected—Let a Farmer Blow His Steam Off—The Obliging Steamboatman.

The experience of a sign painter at Fort Sumter makes a diverting story:

"You see, I got a dinky to take me over from Charleston in one of those little boats that they sail down there closer to the wind than anything I ever saw before. The fort was unoccupied except by an old soldier, who showed me all over the place. 'Have a drink, corporal?' said I to him after awhile. 'No objections,' said he, and we walked and talked a little further. 'Pretty lonesome here, eh, sergeant?' 'Very, indeed,' answered the old duck, warning me as I breasted him a grade higher every two or three minutes.

"Ah," said I, "it's a tough old biz, the army, ain't it, lieutenant?" "Faith, and it is, upon my life," said he.

"Well, I brought my flask out again and pressed it upon him. 'Now, look here, captain,' said I, 'you don't mind me painting a sign around the old fort, do you?' 'Not a bit, my son. Paint as much as ye please,' he answered quite willingly, and away I went to work, finishing the lettering before sundown.

"That little business nearly got me into trouble, and I left Charleston in a hurry. Nearly as bad was the time I was painting on a beehive. I was walking along the railway track with my pots and brushes and saw the hive, which was in A1 position, bound to be seen by everybody in the trains. I stole up to it and slathered on the paint, taking care not to make much noise. Buzz-z-z! One little fellow came to look at me, then another, then another and then a score or more all at once. They didn't seem to object—in fact, seemed to admire the richness of the coloring—but in slinging my leg over the top of the hive I upset my can of turpentine, and not one bee in the crowd would listen to a word of reason. I was laid up for a week or two after that, but I can't be quiet long. It ain't in me to be still. I'm an out and out Yankee, and it warms my heart to be off with the paints, and it ain't incumbent upon me now."

He added this with a complacent and pregnant glance at his massive watch chain and jeweled sleeve buttons, which indicated no little prosperity.

"When anybody gets his back up at me, I just let him blow his steam off, and then I talk to him," he continued.

"Down in Maryland one day I was painting a fence, and a fellow working in a field near by hollered out: 'Hi! Git away from that yar fence!' I let on not to hear him. 'You git now!' the old man shouted once more, but I dabbed and dabbed away as industriously as ever. 'You won't, won't yer?' said he, and then he came for me with a pitchfork in his hands. Folks in Maryland are generally pretty much in earnest when they are mad, but I didn't move an inch. He'd have lifted me like a piece of toast if I had, and instead of a toast it would have been a roast for me.

"I looked as mild and innocent as I could, shaped out the letters and held my head back now and then as if to study the effect. 'Don't you like it?' said I as he got up to me. Well, he met me with some high seasoned expostulations; but, as I told you, I never interfere with a man when he's blowing off steam; it isn't safe. The pitchfork did not look salubrious, but I held to my work, and as I was finishing it he began to cool off and at the same time to take an interest in the sign. 'Got a family?' said I. 'Yes,' said he. 'Young uns, too, maybe.' 'Yes,' said he again. 'Well, now,' said I, 'ain't you ashamed of yourself to let your temper get the better of you in this way? Think of the bad effect on your children. But I'll paint it out.' 'No, leave it on, stranger; I like it,' he answered, and we went over to the house together, which proves that when a man's blowing off it's best not to sit on the safety valve.

"I went up the Mississippi with old Captain Leathers in the Natchez, with her smokestacks painted crimson to signify that they would be burned red hot before she would be passed, and at the first landing I set to work on all the rocks. The old captain was immensely tickled with the idea. 'Look at the darned Yank!' he cried to the passengers. 'How long before you start, cap?' shouted I. 'We'll wait till you get through,' he answered, and he did the same thing at every other landing. But the newspapers have made such an outcry against the desecration of nature, as they call it, that a law forbidding it has been passed in some of the states, and, on the whole, rock painting is discouraged by our patrons, who think it spoils the sale of their articles."—Chicago Times-Herald.

A Woman of Nerve.

Mrs. Louis Kirshoffer of Orange, N. J., is a woman of nerve. The other day a hound belonging to her husband went mad, broke his chain and made a dash at one of Mrs. Kirshoffer's sons. He tore the boy's clothes, but fortunately did not bite hard enough to break the skin. Mrs. Kirshoffer rushed to her son's aid, and the dog turned on her and bit her, but her clothes were too thick for him to break the skin. She then picked the dog up by the collar, carried him to the cellarway, threw him down the steps and closed the door. Mr. Kirshoffer came home later and shot him.

Fulfilled in Time.

He stood dazzled with the bright light that had broken in upon him. "I understand why we call feet!"

He jumped to one side to avoid a scorch.

"pedal extremities."

It was the year 1900, and he was the only man on earth who still refused to ride a wheel.—New York World

SCOTCH HUMOR.

It Crops Out Occasionally Among Elders of the Kirk.

The elder of the kirk, like most of us, can blunder occasionally. The pastor of a small village on the borders had gone for a few days to visit some relatives, when an old lady was suddenly stricken down and not expected to live more than a few hours. The elder was hastily summoned to attend; but, having been lately elected to the post, which he had accepted in order to satisfy the vanity of his wife, he did not feel able to face the trying ordeal. His wife entreated him to do his duty, and whispering a few lines of Scripture into his ears sent him off on his errand.

An hour later his wife beheld him stepping homeward as brisk as a March hare. She inquired how he had come on.

"Oh, fine, woman, fine!" was the reply. "She was dead when I got there!"

A short time ago, when disestablishment was in everybody's mouth, an old lady created quite a sensation in a church not far from Annan. Having been from home a considerable time, she was unaware that the election of elders had taken place. She attended services the following Sunday, when the minister, commenting on the result, remarked that in David Richardson the church had a new pillar of strength, to which she retorted: "What! David Richardson a pillar! Nae wonder the auld kirk's gann to fa'!" David, who had the misfortune to have a wooden leg and a hump back, quietly rose up and answered: "Whae ht, ye gowk. Criffel's (a mountain in the neighborhood) not straight!"

On one occasion the minister met Donald coming from Dumfries Road fair in rather a muddled state. "David! David! Do I see your double?"

"Eh, guidskakes, minister!" exclaimed the elder. "Guidskakes, are ye fou tae?"

A minister, feeling indisposed on one occasion, did not put in an appearance, and the elder, apologizing for his absence, gave it out that "his reverence was unco bad in the roomatic" (for so he pronounced the word rheumatism) "and couldn't get out."

On hearing this startling intelligence an old lady who happened to be present shrieked out:

"Eh, that auld hizzy o' his! Has she locked pair man in the attic because he was enjoying himself at Farmer Bell's kirk?"—Scottish American.

SARDINE FISHING.

The Process From the Time of the Catch to the Canning and Cooking.

Toward the end of April the sardine fishermen along the coast of Brittany begin to watch for the bubbling of the sardines on the surface of the sea. For they know that vast shoals of the little fish are on their way from the coast of Africa up through the bay of Biscay to the north, and that they must be caught, if at all, as they pass. When any one sees the water agitated, word spreads rapidly and the boats put out from the shore and race to the shoal.

When the net is extended, the water is "bailed" by throwing balls of "roque" into it. As the bait dissolves and sinks the sardines rise and remain long after to nibble it, and their doom is sealed. For this reason "roque" is a most important part of the sardine fisherman's outfit. It is made of the eggs of mackerel and codfish mixed with clay, and is rather expensive, costing from 25 shillings to 70 shillings a barrel.

Within the curing factories or canneries everything is bustle and confusion, for there must not be a moment's delay in cleaning the fish. All night long the work is carried on by the light of blazing oil wicks. The sardines are spread out on benches or tables, where salt is dusted over them. Then the women go along and snip off the heads with great scissors.

The little flat boxes so well known to commerce are taken one by one and filled from the glistening pile of fish, after which pure olive oil from the province of Bari, in Italy, is poured over them and the tops soldered on.

In the meantime a great caldron of hot water has been raised to the boiling point ready for the real operation of cooking the fish. The sealed boxes are thrown into it and left for two or three hours. If any oil appears on the top of the water, the master workman knows that some can has not been properly soldered, and the loss is charged up to the man who did the work. A good workman will not lose more than two or three boxes in 100.—New York Recorder.

The Work of the Heart.

One of the most remarkable things about the heart is the amount of work it does. Considering the organ as a pump whose task is to deliver a known quantity of blood against a known "head," it is easy to show that in 24 hours a man's heart does about 124 foot tons of work. "In other words," says a contemporary, "if the whole force expended by the heart in 24 hours were gathered into one huge stroke, such a power would lift 124 tons one foot from the ground. A similar calculation has been made respecting the amount of work expended by the muscles involved in breathing. In 24 hours these muscles do about 21 foot tons of work."

A Mob.

A mob is usually a creature of very mysterious existence, particularly in a large city. Where it comes from or whether it goes few men can tell. Assembling and dispersing with equal suddenness, it is as difficult to follow to its various resorts as the sea itself, nor does the parallel stop here, for the ocean is not more fickle and uncertain, more terrible when aroused, more unreasonable or more cruel.—Dickens.

HOW BEADS ARE MADE.

One of the Oldest and Most Interesting of the Minor Arts.

Chinese are the oldest beadmakers in the world. They have made beads so long that even their historians do not mention a time when the industry was not ancient. And the Chinese today do the work just as their forefathers did, and the styles are exactly the same.

After the Chinese no people are so expert as the Venetians. At present there are more than 1,000 workmen in the island of Murano alone who are engaged in beadmaking. The few manufacturers in other parts of the world have all learned the secret of the craft in Venice. For beadmaking there must be a rope walk connected with the glass factory. A rope walk is a narrow, straight gallery 150 feet long and so situated that the middle is not far from the furnaces in which the glass is melted. The first process is the making of ordinary tubes like those used in almost every drug store. Two brawny workmen with bare, brown arms seize a huge wedge of the "metal," as the molten glass is called, between their blowpipes, and after it has been blown hollow they gradually stretch it out into a long, swinging rope.

When it has been reduced to the proper size for the beads about to be made, it is laid away to cool, after which a workman comes along and in a wonderfully deft manner chips it into fragments of uniform size. Often for small beads these are not much larger than a grain of wheat, but so carefully is the work done that the little cylinders are rarely cracked or spoiled.

The pieces are now picked up by boys and placed in a tub with sand and ashes and stirred up carefully. In this way the holes in the embryo beads are stuffed full, thus preventing the danger of the sides flattening together when heat is applied. They are next placed in a skillet—just such a one as the housewife uses in frying eggs—and stirred over a very hot fire until the ragged edges where the pieces were broken from the tube are rounded, giving the bead a globular form.

As soon as they are cool the ashes and sand are shaken out of them in a sieve, and then they are separated according to size by other sieves. They are taken next to a long table around which a whole flock of boys and girls are sitting. If the glass is colored, as it often is, the piles of beads on the table suggest a rainbow, with every hue, from jet black, through red, green, yellow and blue, up to white.

Each child has a needle and thread, and by long practice the beads are placed on strings with almost inconceivable swiftness. And the children keep an exact count, too, so that the manufacturer knows just how many beads he is sending out. The threads are tied into buntles and shipped to almost every port where a vessel touches. —Chicago Record.

BRYANT'S MARRIAGE.

It Was an Ideal Union Between the Poet and His Wife.

Allusion has already been made to William Cullen Bryant's marriage. None could have been happier, no union more nearly an ideal one. Miss Fanny Fairchild was a young lady whose parents had lived on the Seakonk, a stream tributary to the Green river, not far from Great Barrington. Early left an orphan, she made her home alternately with her married sisters in that place, and there it was that Bryant met her. Charming in person, sweet in disposition, lovely in character, she drew him to her through his sympathy with her orphanage, his admiration of her beauty and his appreciation of her worth. For 45 years she was the stay and blessing of his life. What that marriage was to him they knew best who knew him best. Reserved on the subject to the world at large, he allowed only those who were nearest him to know the wonderful depth and tenderness of his affection. Their sympathy was perfect, their dependence mutual.

He said at his death: "I never wrote a poem that I did not repeat it to her and take her judgment upon it. I found its success with the public to be precisely in proportion to the impression it made upon her." A dear friend of them both has said: "The union between Mr. and Mrs. Bryant was a poem of the tenderest rhythm. Any of us who remember Mr. Bryant's voice when he said 'Frances' will join in his hope that she kept the same beloved name in heaven. I remember alluding to those exquisite lines, 'The Future Life,' to Mrs. Bryant, and her replying, 'Oh, my dear, I am always sorry for any one who sees me after reading those lines; they must be so disappointed.' Beatrice and Laura have not received such tributes from their poets, for Mrs. Bryant's husband was her poet and lover at 70 as at 17." —Arthur Lawrence in Century.

Very Timid.

A young man who had been seeking employment from an editor finally obtained leave to write an article on a subject assigned by the editor and to bring it in person in a week.

The article was brought at the appointed time. The editor read it and knitted his brows.

"You have some good thoughts here," he said, "but you write very badly."

"Well, you see, sir," faltered the applicant, "I was kind of scared. I never wrote in public before." —Atlanta Constitution.

A Mine.

The poor young man was trying to win the rich young woman.

"Be mine," he implored.

"What kind of mine?" she responded; "gold mine?" —Detroit Free Press.

A cultivated reader of history is domesticated in all families. He dines with Pericles and sups with Titian. —Willmott.

His Notion of Hospitality.

There is nothing like making people feel at home. There is one man in our street, says a Washington writer, who prides himself on it. My friend Lucy called at his house not long ago, and, as everybody urged her to stay to dinner, she said, "They had beefsteak for dinner that night, and it was simply ideal beefsteak. The host urged Lucy to take a second helping, and after politely demurring she accepted it. She was eating it when the young son of the family asked for more too."

"Don't be a pig, Jim," said his father, with the utmost cheerfulness. "There isn't any more for you. You see," turning to Lucy with a smile of keenest hospitality, "we weren't expecting company."

An Example.

Theodore—Tell me, now, what is the meaning of the expression, "pulling your leg?"

Richard—I can't tell you in so many words, but I will illustrate. You haven't $10 about you that you can let me have for a week or two? Thanks. —Boston Transcript.

Washing Dirty Linen.

"Washing dirty linen in public" is probably an old proverbial saying. It was made famous by Napoleon, who used it in a speech to the chamber of deputies in 1814 to intimate that differences between the parties in France should not become a matter of public scandal.

The sea bladder consists of a parent animal, with its own air bladder, and from which 1 to 500 children attach to it by a hairlike membrane. The whole family moves together.
